

Debbie Zuckerman

Debbie is riding for...

I am riding to honour the people in my life who have fought, though not always won, the battle with cancer: my father Leonard Caplan, Ray Zuckerman, George Zuckerman, Sherri Issenman, Linda Zuckerman, Mehre Zuckerman; all the people dealing with cancer who have passed through the oncology clinic where I volunteer; the health care professionals who give such support, both medical and otherwise, and for all of us in hope of one day finding a cure.

A message from Debbie... As most of you know I lost my father to cancer 21 years ago. It was a very emotional time: I was a young woman, uneducated about the disease and there wasn't much institutional support. My father was my pillar of strength; it was unimaginably hard to grasp how cancer ravaged him. After my father's death I vowed that I would do what I could to help the families of people undergoing cancer treatments. For the past six years I have volunteered at a Montreal oncology clinic supporting doctors, patients and families dealing with the challenges of cancer. I have decided to take on the personal challenge of raising $25,000 in order to participate in the Ride to End Cancer. I believe that with your support we all can make a difference. As an avid cyclist with the dream of joining a group of dedicated athletes raising money for cancer research, I am asking family and friends to support my fundraising campaign and support research and development in the quest for a cure for cancer.
